One of the early features of Pope Francis and the particular style of leadership he seems to have adopted is the emphasis he has placed on being poor and being with the poor. From his choice of the name “Francis”, to the homily given at his first Mass, to his choice of simpler garb and symbols – all speak of a desire to be poor and to be with the poor. This, obviously, is all well and good, given our Lord’s own emphasis on being poor and being for the poor.

There are, of course, certain limitations in how, specifically, Pope Francis will be able to carry out this movement of poverty. Some, for example, point to the “riches” of the Vatican. This, however, is largely a myth created by ‘Catholic bashers’, and it is not borne out by the facts. The annual budget of the Vatican is about $300 million dollars which, while more than your Pastor can ever dream of, is actually quite small compared to every other institution of a similar size. Most large universities, for example, operate with a budget many times that size. In fact, it is quite likely that if Pope Francis does overhaul the Vatican Curia in order to make it more effective and efficient, he will have to increase its budget to do so.

The other ‘wealth myth’, of course, is the vast riches evinced by the priceless art possessed by the Vatican. This, however, is also untrue, as the Church sees itself as the custodian of this artistic heritage, and not its owner. Every piece of art carries a book value of one Euro, and none of it may be used to leverage loans or any other form of financial gain. Pope Francis is restricted by law from selling any of it. Also, even if it could be sold, it would be lost to the world as it entered into the private galleries of collectors. In fact, despite the glorious images we see during the public celebrations at the Vatican, those who live and work there do so in the most austere of circumstances. I doubt most of us would be comfortable in the Spartan surroundings there, compared to the luxurious world in which we find ourselves here.

This, perhaps, is the main point of the call to the Church to be poorer, and to be with the poor. Who is the Church, after all, if not you and I? No doubt, Pope Francis will lead by example by simplifying some of the external signs that surround him. He will do this, however, in order to teach all of us that our own lives need to bear greater witness to Jesus Who became poor for our sake.

Once again, everyone is invited to adopt an unborn child for this year. It is an idea initiated by Bishop Fulton Sheen and in response to the abortion holocaust underway in our land.

Pink (for girls) and blue (for boys) forms are available at the entrance of both Worship Sites. Please take it home and pray about it, before choosing a name for your baby. Write the name of your child, and your name too, on the right hand portion of the form, cut it off, and leave it in the crib in the entranceway to the Church.

Keep the left hand portion with your child's name and the prayer which you will commit to praying each day for your child.

On the Feast of the Holy Innocents, Mass will be celebrated for all these children.
